

PRESS RELEASE

Banor Capital sponsors FILL the Festival of Italian Literature in London

Milan, 16 October 2019 - Banor Capital is pleased to announce its sponsorship of the Festival of Italian Literature in London (FILL) to be held in the Victorian rooms of the Coronet Theatre in Notting Hill on Saturday 2 and Sunday 3 November.

Now in its third year, FILL is an independent festival created from the initiative of a group of Italian writers in London that questions and converses with the Anglo-Saxon world about what it means to be Italian and internationality, with a focus on some key issues, such as literature and politics, migration, the role of the translator/interpreter and feminism.

The programme is full of events on various issues from the future of democracy to Brexit-themed stand-up comedy, with guests like Domenico Lucano and Rachel Cusk. Plus more... the relationship between literature and social class, art and climate crisis, and the eternal legacy of the myth that is Maradona.

The festival is proposed as an observatory on modern times from a London on the brink of Brexit. The programme and tickets to FILL 2019 are available at:

This year, FILL has included something EXTRA. It will be preceded by a short calendar of special events scattered throughout the city and in Edinburgh.

"It is a real pleasure to be a supporter of the FILL initiative", stated Giacomo Mergoni, CEO of Banor Capital. "As an Italian in London, like so many of my colleagues, as well as an avid reader, I really appreciated the past editions of the event, which has had great success and received positive feedback. This year, the programme is even richer, and I hope it will find a permanent place in the city's busy calendar of events. The idea of a partnership came naturally to us. We at Banor Capital pay close attention to opportunities to spread culture and encourage discussion and grow new awareness, such as environmental and social, which are already an integral part of our investment process".
